

DESCRIPTIVE TRADE MARKS

Copyright © 2017 Intellectual Property Office of Singapore.

You may download, view, print and reproduce this document without modifications, but only for non-commercial use. All other rights are reserved. This document and its contents are made available on an "as is" basis, and all implied warranties are disclaimed. The contents of this document do not constitute, and should not be relied on as, legal advice. You should approach a legal professional if you require legal advice.

DESCRIPTIVE TRADE MARKS

Contents:	Page
1 Introduction	2
2 Relevant legislation	3
3 Principles for assessing the descriptiveness of the mark	4
(a) Mark is to be assessed as a whole	4
(b) Mark is descriptive if, as a whole, one of its possible meanings is capable of designating a characteristic of the goods or services	4
(c) Marks which may allude to attributes yet does not speak of a specific and objective characteristic of the goods and services	7
(d) Marks which consist of a word or neologism composed of elements, each of which is descriptive of the characteristics of the products or services	8

1 INTRODUCTION

This chapter is concerned with the grounds for refusal of registration of a mark which arise due to the descriptiveness of the mark. The mark will be objected under Section 7(1)(c) if it is descriptive.

2 RELEVANT LEGISLATION

Trade Marks Act (Cap. 332, 2005 Rev. Ed.)

Absolute grounds for refusal of registration

7. —(1) The following shall not be registered:

...

(c) trade marks which consist exclusively of signs or indications which may serve, in trade, to designate the kind, quality, quantity, intended purpose, value, geographical origin, the time of production of goods or of rendering of services, or other characteristics of goods or services;

...

3 PRINCIPLES FOR ASSESSING THE DESCRIPTIVENESS OF THE MARK

Section 7(1)(c) of the Singapore Trade Marks Act provides that trade marks which consist exclusively of signs or indications which may serve, in trade, to designate the kind, quality, quantity, intended purpose, value, geographical origin, the time of production of goods or of rendering of services, or other characteristics of goods or services shall not be registered. Marks will only come under this objection if the mark consists “exclusively” of descriptive signs. The main aim for not registering descriptive signs or indications is that such signs should be free for use by all and should not be monopolised by any one trader. Further, descriptive marks cannot do the job of distinguishing a trader’s goods or services without the trader investing in advertisements and consumer education to educate the public that it is a trade mark of the trader.

How does one interpret whether a mark is “exclusively descriptive”? In Singapore, we apply the following broad principles in assessing if a mark is to be refused registration on the ground that it is exclusively descriptive.

(a) Mark is to be assessed as a whole

First, marks are to be assessed as a whole.

(b) Mark is descriptive if, as a whole, one of its possible meanings is capable of designating a characteristic of the goods or services

Then, we look at whether any one of the possible meanings of the mark as a whole is capable of being descriptive. In OHIM v Wm. Wrigley Jr. Company (Case C-191/01P) for DOUBLEMINT, the ECJ confirmed that it is not necessary that the relevant sign is actually being used as a description before an objection based on descriptiveness can be raised. Further, it does not matter if a term has several possible meanings, as long as one of its possible meanings is descriptive (for example, in that case, the combination of “double” and “mint” could mean either that the goods contained twice the amount of mint or it could mean that the goods contain two different kinds of mint). If, at least one of the possible meanings of the relevant trade mark was capable of designating a characteristic of the relevant goods or services, the sign or indication shall not be registered.

The DOUBLEMINT case has now made it clear that, if there was any possibility of a mark being used in a descriptive sense or consisting exclusively of elements that are purely descriptive, registration should be denied. The fact that other competitors could use other terms to describe their goods/services does not make the mark any more registrable.

The European Court of First Instance has found the following marks non-registrable:

- (i) Community Concepts AG v OHIM (Case T-360/99) for INVESTORWORLD in relation to financial services – “investor” implies that the services designated are aimed at investors and the addition of “world” does not add any further feature such as to render the sign capable of distinguishing the services of the applicant from those of other undertakings because constituted as it is, the sign merely refers to the “world of the investor”, meaning, the services in question relate to anything which might be of interest to an investor;
- (ii) Harbinger Corporation v OHIM (Case T-345/99) for TRUSTEDLINK, inter alia, communications services – “link” means that which connects. It has a particular meaning in the field of information technology in that it refers in particular, to the links connecting the various data servers on the Internet. The sign “Trustedlink” has therefore, the meaning of a reliable link or a link which can be relied on.
- (iii) Mitsubishi HiTec Paper Bielefeld GmbH v OHIM (Case T-331/99) for GIROFORM in relation to printed matter – those two words, used together, therefore designate, in financial institution circles, a printed form relating to bank payment transactions for debiting a customer’s account. There is also evidence to show the current usage of the word with that meaning (Electronic giro forms, Bank giro forms, Giro Form, Giro application form, Giro form). The sign tells consumers of the intended purpose of the product. The fact that the product in respect of which registration of the trade mark was applied for can be used to print other sorts of forms does not make the mark any more registrable.
- (iv) Taurus-Film GmbH & Co v OHIM (Case T-136/99) for CINE COMEDY in relation to films and film production services – it must be acknowledged that the term “Cine Comedy” is such as to enable the public concerned to establish immediately and without further reflection a concrete and direct relationship with the majority of the services in question, particularly those which may concretely and directly concern the product comedy in film form or the production or transmission of the latter.
- (v) Deutsche Krankenversicherung AG (DKV) v OHIM (Case T-359/99) for EUROHEALTH in relation to insurance services – the word “EuroHealth” allows the relevant section of the public to establish immediately and without further reflection a definite and direct association with the health insurance services which fall within the category of insurance referred to in the application in question. In the present case, the relevant section of the public is deemed to be the average, reasonably well-informed and reasonably observant and circumspect English-speaking consumer of insurance services.

In Singapore, the test of “descriptiveness” was applied in one opposition case, Uni-Charm Corporation v The Procter & Gamble Company (TM No. T00/15262Z). The case concerned an application for the registration of the word, “breathable” in relation to sanitary napkins. In ruling that the mark is not registrable, the Registrar said,

“The literal meaning of the word is clear. The word signifies the products’ ability to admit air to the skin and allowing perspiration to evaporate. The word used in relation to products such as the ones in question connotes “airiness” and the “porous” quality. It is a word which would naturally be used by other traders in relation to similar products. In this regard, the Opponents have lodged evidence showing use of the word “breathable” by other proprietors including the Opponents. In particular, the Opponents have satisfied me that the word, “breathable” has been used by them in a descriptive manner in packagings and advertisements in relation to their “Whisper” and “Always” range of related products.”

The Registrar also drew a direct inference from the evidence that the applicants themselves have used the word, “breathable” in a descriptive manner and not as a trade mark since in actual use, the word is accompanied by the house brand, SOFY within a “wing-like device”.

Example

Singapore Application No. : T04/14680B
 Applicant : Kee Wee Hup Kee Food Manufacture Pte Ltd
 Date of application : 1 September 2004

Class 30: Noodles.

Decision: As the mark means “Korea” in English, and the said Chinese characters are commonly found in Korean-made products, the mark is objectionable under Section 7(1)(c) in that it signifies the geographical origin of the products and also objectionable under Section 7(1)(d) in that it consists of words which have become customary in the bona fide and established practices of the trade. The mark describes a specific and objective characteristic of the goods sought for registration.

The mark is such as to enable the consumer concerned, (in this case, the general public) to establish immediately and without further reflection a concrete and direct relationship with the goods concerned, i.e., the goods are made in Korea.

(c) Marks which may allude to attributes yet does not speak of a specific and objective characteristic of the goods or services

On the other hand, if the mark merely consists of laudatory elements or attributes which do not inform consumers of a specific and objective characteristic of the goods or services, the mark may not be refused registration. This principle is illustrated in the following examples:

Example 1

Singapore Registration No. : T00/14021D
Applicant : Prescriptives Inc.
Date of application : 11 August 2000

FALSE EYELASHES

Class 03: Cosmetics, perfumery and toiletries; not including false eyelashes.

Decision: As the mark merely alludes to possible attributes but does not refer to any specific or objective characteristic of the goods (which in this case, includes mascaras), the mark was found to be capable of distinguishing the goods as a whole.

Example 2

Singapore Registration No. : T01/04552E
Applicant : DBS Bank Ltd
Date of application : 29 March 2001

CASHLINE

CashLine

Class 36: Financial services; banking services; financing, loan, credit and mortgage services; provision of credit; information and advisory services relating to the aforesaid; including the aforesaid services provided via electronic and communications networks.

Decision: As the words, “cash” and “line” combined is not a recognisable phrase in the English language and the words combined do not refer to any specific characteristic of the services, the mark was found to be acceptable. There is also a perceptible difference between the mark as a whole and the mere sum of its parts.

(d) Marks which consist of a word or neologism composed of elements, each of which is descriptive of the characteristics of the products or services

A mark consisting of a word or neologism composed of elements, each of which is descriptive of the characteristics of the products or services in respect of which registration is sought, is itself descriptive and non-registrable, unless there is a perceptible difference between the word or neologism and the mere sum of its parts.

For example, in Koninklijke KPN Nederland NV v Benelux-Merkenbureau (Case C-363/99) for POSTKANTOOR (“POSTKANTOOR” can be translated as “Post Office” and was sought to be registered for goods and services such as postage stamps, paper, telecommunications and insurance), the ECJ ruled that unless there is a “perceptible difference” between the word and the mere sum of the descriptive parts, the word will not be capable of registration. In order for a mark to be capable of registration, it must produce an impression that is sufficiently far removed from that produced by the mere combination of meanings lent by the elements of which it is composed. In that case, the ECJ was guided by public interest grounds that descriptive trade marks should be kept free for all to use. That is the case even when there are more usual signs or indications or synonyms for designating the same characteristics. It is irrelevant whether there are competitors who may or may not have an interest in using the signs or indications of which the mark consists. It does not matter whether or not the characteristics are commercially essential or merely ancillary.

Example

Singapore Application No.	: T05/1147IH
Applicant	: PTC-Nakajima Suisan (Asia) Pte Ltd
Date of application	: 6 July 2005

MR SUSHI

Class 30: Japanese food, including sushi, sushi condiments, spices and all related sushi ingredients; noodles; rice (cooked); coffee; tea; green tea; rice (cooked); preparations made from rice for human consumption; foodstuffs made from soya; mustard; mustard powder for food; wasabe; ginger; preserved ginger; vinegar; sauces (condiments); salad dressings; spices; pastries and confectionery; ices; ice cream; ice cream confectionery; all included in Class 30.

Decision: Mark is acceptable as the presence of “Mr” in the mark makes the mark as a whole, distinctive and capable of functioning as a badge of origin. There is a perceptible difference between “Sushi”, a descriptive element, and “Mr Sushi” as a whole.